and Creativity Student Awards 2025/26
香港中文大學校友評議會傑出服務及創意學生獎 2025/26

Name 姓名	Ko Man Hei 高文曦
Major 主修	MBChB (Global Physician-Leadership Stream) 內外全科醫學士（環球醫學領袖培訓專修組別）

My commitment to community service is rooted in a core conviction: the pursuit of medical excellence must be inseparable from the pursuit of social equity and compassionate action. As President of the 11th Executive Committee of Doctor of Excellence (DOE), I have had the privilege of translating this belief into a tangible leadership role. My tenure has been defined not by a singular type of outreach, but by a strategic, multi-layered approach to service that addresses systemic vulnerabilities while fostering a culture of empathetic, holistic care within and beyond the CUHK community.

Doctor of Excellence (DOE) is a joint university student organization committed to enhancing community health and well-being through outreach programs and educational initiatives in collaboration with our dedicated team of doctor mentors. Composed of three departments, namely academic, mentorship and service, the daily functions of DOE are coordinated by the President. DOE holds an unobstructed vision: “To serve the medical community by promoting holistic personal education, and humanistic, all-round career development, via doctor-student mentorship and collaborations.”

My leadership philosophy centres on identifying underserved populations and designing interventions that are both large-scale and precisely tailored. This meant orchestrating a health service trip for over 1,000 Cambodians and coordinating the packing of 800 food fortune bags, but it also meant ensuring that no community was overlooked. Our team designed interactive health education for students with Special Educational Needs (SEN) to make knowledge accessible, and coordinated Lunar New Year celebrations for children with cancer to provide essential psychosocial support. Recognizing the often-invisible struggles of migrant communities, together with my peers in Lee Woo Sing College, I designed and conducted a mental health workshop for foreign domestic workers, employing art therapy and shared narratives to build resilience.

Beyond direct outreach, I have been committed to deepening the intellectual and ethical foundations of community engagement. Our committee organized a Bioethics Debate Competition with the CUHK Centre for Bioethics, challenging high school students to confront the moral complexities of modern medicine—an initiative that extended CUHK’s academic mission into the public sphere. Most significantly, our Academic department coordinated the DOE Patient Library Project in collaboration with the Hong Kong Organ Transplant Foundation. Through publishing in-depth interviews with transplant recipients, living donors, and grieving families, this project humanized medical science, transforming anonymous "cases" into profound narratives of courage, connection, and humanity. It served to educate the public, reduce stigma, and honour the deeply personal stories at the heart of healthcare.

To ensure the sustainability of these efforts, our Mentorship department focused on mentorship and capacity-building across the academic pipeline. We paired junior medical students with specialist mentors for early clinical exposure and organized the Mediscovery Camp to inspire the next generation of healthcare professionals.

I am deeply grateful to CUHK and the DOE for providing the platform and opportunities that have shaped my journey. It is with profound honour and humility that I submit this record of my community contributions, and I wish to express my sincere thanks to the CUHK Convocation for recognising my potential and efforts through the Outstanding Services and Creativity Student Award 2025/26. This recognition is not merely a personal accolade, but a reaffirmation of my commitment to serve society through compassionate, intellectual, and collaborative leadership—a commitment I will carry forward throughout my career and my life.
